Plague-Stricken Halls

by Austin Schaefer

The Plague-Stricken Halls were once a thriving goblin fortress with an ecclesiastical bent, until an unexpected visitor from the Underdark brought a mysterious plague.

The fortress was aligned with Law, and familiar to travellers as a refuge in otherwise hostile country. If the PCs need a reason to visit, they were sent to investigate why no merchants have come along that road for several weeks...

Walls lined with shelves, including several scrolls and books. In the center of the room is a heavy oak table, carved with depictions of war, and 2d8 chairs of varying quality and size. Careful investigation (if this is the first time the dungeon has been visited) hears a very faint whimpering coming from behind the northwest shelf. Moving it reveals a small opening to 15.
15. Secret Pit. Dark. In 20' pit below is Durakrag, starving and raving. Floor littered with waterskins.
16. Dining Hall. Dark. Contains two upright tables, 2d8 chairs, and a well. Floating in well is a goblin’s body—it seems he attempted swim until rescue arrived. His body carries the key to 23. Door to 17 is labeled “Quarantine” in Goblin and blocked. Door to 23 also locked.

Trash on edge of pit contains nothing of worth, except a shimmering, faintly-glowing green Strand of Ever-Glowing Ivy. A recessed staircase descending into the pit leads to the underdark and undercity.
